Mr Tony McCusker,
Central Community Relations Unit,
Stormont Castle,
Belfast.

Dear Tony,

re: DRUMCREE FAITH AND JUSTICE GROUP

The Drumcree Faith and Justice Group was formed by a group of local people in Portadown in July 1985.

The Group first came together in response to Orange parades going through Nationalist areas. They wanted to:

- inform Orangemen about the way Nationalists feel about such parades;
- raise questions for the RUC about their impartiality in allowing such parades and not allowing similar parades to those in the Nationalist community;
- show the way Catholics and Protestants can and should get on with each other;
- witness to the truth and effectiveness of non-violent action as a way of dealing with conflict situations.

In 1987 the Group organised the first tea party on the Garvaghy Road before the Orange parade. The Group were joined by Protestants from outside Portadown. Some Portadown Protestants also wanted to join, but they were dissuaded by members of the Group from doing so because of the danger to their lives. The demonstration had a deep effect within the Nationalist community by showing the possibilities of non-violent action.

Prior to this, reaction to the parades among Nationalists had involved either taking part in insulting, aggressive or violent activity on the one hand, or staying at home, filled with resentment, on the other. The tea party introduced new possibilities that not only took account of the Nationalist grievance, but attempted to understand the position of Orangemen, to be respectful to their traditions, and to build relationships between the two communities. It also helped to soften the conflict between the Nationalist community and both the RUC and Orangemen. It is not unreasonable to credit a fair proportion of the reduction in community tensions in Portadown since 1985 to the impact of the tea party and subsequent activity by the group.

From 1985 on the Group has engaged in dialogue with different Protestant groups on both religious and political issues. Among these were Seagoe Church of Ireland parish, and Armagh Road Presbyterian Church.

The Group also acted as an effective informal liaison group with the RUC, and their good offices have on several occasions been sought by the RUC to act as a calming influence during times of tension.

In May 1990 the Group confronted the North Armagh brigade of the IRA who expelled three local men from Northern Ireland, apparently on the grounds of "anti-social" behaviour. Members of the Group did a door to door survey in Churchill Park of how local residents responded to this threat. Out of 162 houses approached, 4 supported the IRA position, 8 abstained, 122 condemned the IRA action, and the remainder were not at home. The Group subsequently publicised the results of the survey in the press and on radio and got wide coverage. This was a difficult action for the Group to take, but they were determined not to give in to this kind of oppression from the IRA.

The group have been invited to speak to PACE groups, to the AGM of the Committee of the Administration of Justice, to the Churches Central Committee for Community Work Conference, and their story has been told on ecumenical tours by Fr Brian Lennon, when travelling with Rev John Dunlop of Rosemary Presbyterian Church, and Rev John Morrow, leader of the Corrymeela Community, in the US, and at the Middle Eastern Council of Churches seminar the Role of Religion in conflict situations in Cyprus in Easter of this year.

Other projects on the Group's agenda are:

- the development of a cultural celebration of St Patrick's Day that will challenge the exclusive linking of this feast with Catholics and Nationalists;

- the publication of a pamphlet raising questions of civic responsibility for both Nationalists and Unionists from the perspective of Christian faith. This pamphlet is based on four months of discussion by Group members responding to Breaking Down The Enmity (published by the Faith and Politics Group) and is currently in its fifth draft;

- the publication of a regular newsletter raising questions about Community Relations within Portadown and Northern Ireland as a whole. This newsletter will be cross community based in its contributors. Churches in Portadown will be used as a basis for selling to ensure that the readership is also cross community;

- circularising local estates at Christmas on a door to door basis with a list of all those who have died in the conflict within the past year;

- training and development in the use of street drama to express some of the ideas of the Group and to break down sectarian attitudes.

- establishing links between youth clubs in the Portadown area, specifically between the Oasis Club, St Mary's Youth Club, and the Cabin Club;

- developing links between both primary and post-primary schools such as St John's, St Columba's, Ballyoran Primary School, Portadown College, and Drumcree High School.

- encouraging and facilitating cross-community contact on environmental issues, such as Ballyfodrin Dump;

- supporting and facilitating cross-community local history ventures, such as the proposal to bring together all the people - now relocated - who were residents of John's Street in a specific year;

- continuing to support contact between Church groups and working towards reconciliation weekends with young people.

While the Group has achieved much during its existence it is finding it increasingly difficult to maintain projects it is currently involved in because of shortage of workers. All its work has to date been done voluntarily. It will be impossible to develop new projects without full time staff. Given the sensitivity of the Group's work, and the qualities needed in its staff, ACE workers would not be an option for the Group.

While it is possible to get funding for equipment and training, and such grants are needed by the Group, the prior need is for a full time development officer. Without this the Group will not grow in membership and good work will be left undone. Portadown is arguably the most sectarian town in Northern Ireland. The Group has solid links in the deprived sector of the Nationalist community, and a track record both of dealing with difficult issues and of forging links with Unionist groups and with statutory agencies. Tackling the problem of sectarianism on the basis of such a group seems a worthwhile task. Unless it is tackled effectively it is unlikely that community or economic development work within either community will be successful.

The Group are therefore approaching the Central Community Relations Committee for immediate funding for a full time Development Officer, and I attach a job description for your attention.

I look forward to your response.

Best wishes,

Brian Lennon, s.j.
